

Drugs Did Affect Me

I once believed drugs had no affect on me. Despite what others say, drugs did affect me. Drugs were easy to buy. I was not caught by the authorities. I had fun while my addiction lasted. Those days are over since my incarceration in a residential program.

First, I had easy access to buying substances. I would walk to or call my supplier for more marijuana. My neighborhood is known for around-the-clock drug activity. No matter where I go, I will always be around drugs. For example, kids as young as ten sell and use drugs.

Second, I was never caught by the authorities while I experimented with drugs. My use of illegal substances got me into other criminal activities, therefore, getting me into trouble with the law. My background with drugs put me in and out of detention centers. Now I am in a residential program in Tucson.

While I was using drugs, I thought I was having fun. At first I was just experimenting. Later on I started depending on marijuana. I started losing focus in school and with family and friends. As a result, I have problems remembering, concentrating, and sleeping.

In conclusion, drugs are easy to access. Drugs have given me long-term problems, even though I haven't been caught. Illegal substances took my fun life from me. Drugs ain't fun. My experiences tell me never go back to substances, no matter how hard life is.

Oslin Singer
February 11, 2008